

Debra Gray

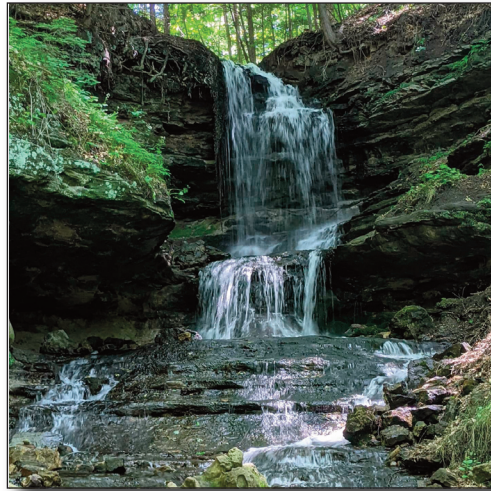

Photography, Mackinaw City, MI

I have always loved the beauty around us and never really thought about photography until I met my husband. He was such a huge fan of my photos. He always told me that I should think about selling them. Of course, I always thought he was just being nice. After all, he was my husband and that's what they do. I found, though, that I had a passion for taking pictures. I took photos of everything, although landscapes were something that intrigued me the most. I began to focus more on that as it was what I enjoyed most. I enjoyed the changing of the seasons, the little nuances that came about almost daily that went somewhat unnoticed.

Then, my husband passed away and I decided that if I didn't try my hand at my passion, when would I? Life is short and I felt that I needed to try this new journey. When the opportunity presented itself, I decided to jump on it and immerse myself within it. I feel as if my husband is right along side of me, pushing me to grow and learn more about my passion and, with respect to him, that is what I am going to do.

I love the beauty of northern Michigan and have lived here all of my life. I feel privileged to be able to capture the beauty of this area in my photos and then share those images with others. My images may not take on the air of fine art, but my images evoke memories and capture moments in time that will never happen again. My images are the truth I saw at that particular time and that truth is what I hope to share. My art is my view of the world through my lens and I hope that you will all enjoy them.
