

Diane Brabant

Upcycled and Found Objects, Rudyard, MI

Diane Brabant was born and raised in the wilds of the upper peninsula of Michigan. A true “Yoooper” from the sleepy little town of Rudyard.

Growing up, nature and the outdoors influenced how she perceived everything around her. Every chance she got she would be exploring the outdoors and looking at how she might be able to repurpose things to make a statement with her art. In a world where most things are made to be thrown away, Diane wishes to give life to items that others may consider lifeless. Preserving our world for future generations through reuse is an important statement and one that is quite prominent in the art world today.

“I have always been curious and creative, so coming from an artistic family, I longed to find my niche. Travel and nature are my inspirations so I began experimenting with ways to incorporate that into my art. I like repurposing what is readily available and making it unique. In my eyes, everything deserves a second chance.”
